Currently I am reading a book titled 13 Reasons Why by Jay Asher. This book is an amazing book; it is narrated by a high-school aged boy named Clay who's friend recently committed suicide. Her name was Hannah Baker. Before Hannah died, she recorded 13 audiotapes about 13 different people explaining why she killed herself. The whole book goes through one night of Clay listening through all of the tapes and discovering the horrible reasons why Hannah felt she no longer wanted to live. It's a horrifying but entrancing book that you can't set down.

Right now I'm reading a book called The Fault In Our Stars by John Green. This book is about a girl named Hazel Grace Lancaster who has stage IV cancer (thyroid originally but it spread so there's a satellite colony in her lungs). Hazel meets a boy named Augustus Waters that had osteosarcoma and lost a leg. They have a mutual attraction; the story follows how they fall in love.
